This one I had to go to Tom Ryan in ETS for. Your PDA can be configured to have both a state email and personal email account. State email goes through ETS server; personal email doesn't (like a Yahoo account, it goes directly over the internet into the device.

Hope this helps.

How about when I send personal email? Do they only travel over the phone contractor line?

Both - it's a network that connects the two to PDAs on either end.

So if I get a personal PDA will my state email come in and out via the state server or the phone contractor line?

All emails on Blackberries set up for state business will come in over phone contractor lines to state server maintained by ETS.

Other mobile communication devices (cues, pocket pcs) are simply over the internet--no server.

One more question: are personal emails on blackberry currently routed through the state server or through AT&T or whomever provides the phone service?

I believe that's true, although I don't know for sure. Eric, have you signed any for Admin?

Are state employees currently signing up for reimbursement without the opinion from law?

When do you expect to hear back from law?

I'm hesitant to go too far on the confidentiality questions until we hear from Law. I would think personal emails on a personal device are confidential, but I'm not an attorney. I will send this question to Law to make sure that they address the confidentiality question in their response to us on the ethics boundaries.

Well that's understandable that state business could be subpoenaed off a personal device, but personal emails on a personal device are confidential? What type of situation would constitute subpoena of personal emails? I'm really just trying to weigh the benefits of a personal vs state device.

We are also waiting on Dept. of Law for confidentiality issues, but I can tell you that using a personal device results in much less probability of audit or ding by the state. It's a strong motivator to move to the personal device with allowance status.

That said, if you have state business on a personal device, it is possible that information could be subpoena'd or accessed through other "public access to information" avenues. This would be specific to a topic, not just the work of an individual.

Does this answer the question?

Thanks, Kim. I have your original email. My question is if we have a personal blackberry that we route our state email to, and also receive reimbursement from the state each month, and sign the reimbursement contract w the state, can our phone and email records be audited or can we as state employees be dinged in any way for having our personal and state emails route to the same device. I would gladly buy my own blackberry if it and its contents were truly mine. Any thoughts here?

Hi Ivy,

The monthly allowance amounts for personal devices are now available. I sent out an email with the form and FAQs on March 7th. I'll forward to you.

Allowance is $40 per month for cell and $75 for Blackberry.

Not waiting for Law on this one. All we need is a form signed by supervisor and employee that the device is needed and that employee has opted to provide.

Waiting for Law to opine on the ethics issues regarding personal use of business assets.

After you see the next email, let me know if you have any other questions.

Kim

Kim,
Can you answer my questions below re: cell phone reimbursement? I should have probably asked you first.

Thanks,

Ivy
